ABSTRACT

A computer-implemented method comprising: transmitting a test file to a client; timing the transmission of the test file with a timer; resetting the timer and reattempting the transmission of the test file if the timer reaches a first maximum threshold value; and calculating an effective bitrate for delivering data to the client based on transmission time of said test file.